1 Course Information

Course Description

Why are some nations rich while others remain poor? What policies can governments implement to promote economic development? This course explores these questions by examining the theories and empirical evidence related to economic growth and development. Topics include: (1) the historical determinants of growth, including capital accumulation, geography, institutions, and culture; and (2) the role of government policies in promoting development, including trade policy, foreign aid, education, health, and infrastructure.

Credit Hour Policy Statement

This class meets the federal credit hour policy of 1 hour of class with an expected 2 hours of additional student work outside of class each week for approximately 15 weeks for each hour of credit, or a total of 45-75 total hours for each credit.

Course Learning Outcomes

1. Evaluate competing theories regarding the historical causes of cross-country income differences.
2. Analyze the role of historical shocks and political processes in shaping persistent development trajectories, including mechanisms of path dependence and institutional persistence.
3. Assess historical cases of economic transformation to identify how technological change, market integration, and political authority interacted to produce sustained growth in some regions but not others.
4. Evaluate the effectiveness of development interventions in areas such as health, nutrition, education, finance, and entrepreneurship, using economic reasoning to assess intended & unintended consequences.
5. Explain how market failures, information constraints, and political incentives affect individual and firm behavior in low-income settings, and how these constraints shape the design of development policy.
6. Critically assess the limits of policy-driven development, including the roles of institutional capacity, governance, and social norms in translating well-designed interventions into long-run economic progress.

Required Materials

There are two required texts for this course, which are available for purchase at the bookstore and online:

- How the World Became Rich, by Mark Koyama & Jared Rubin (KR)
- Poor Economics, by Abhijit Banerjee & Esther Duflo (BD)

All readings should be completed before class. Any additional readings will be announced in class and posted to Blackboard.

Honor Code

You will be expected to adhere to the University honor code:

I will neither give nor receive unauthorized aid, nor will I tolerate an environment that condones the use of unauthorized aid.

Technology Policy

While I understand that laptops and smartphones may be useful for note-taking, they are also a significant source of distraction. And that's speaking from personal experience.

Therefore, laptops and smartphones should not be out during lecture unless you are explicitly authorized to do so. If you have one, you may use a tablet and smart pencil in lieu of a notebook. If you believe your circumstances warrant an exception to this policy, please send me an email explaining your situation before the end of the first week of class.

Large Language Models, ChatGPT, and Similar Tools

I'm as excited/nervous about our emergent AI overlords as anyone. However, AI tools are most effective when combined with pre-existing human expertise. Given that you're here to develop this expertise, the use of AI tools like ChatGPT and others to complete any graded work is strictly prohibited. These tools are not a substitute for your own learning, understanding, and engagement with the material. If you have questions about the use of a particular tool, please ask me.

Communication Policy

While I will communicate major announcements in class, it is your responsibility to periodically check your UE email and the course Blackboard page for announcements and other important information. You must use your UE email account for all communications. I will not respond to emails from non-UE accounts. I will respond to emails within 24 hours, except on weekends. If you have not received a response within 24 hours, please follow up.

I also expect you to use basic email etiquette appropriate for a professional environment. This includes using a clear subject line, addressing me by name, and signing your emails with your name. Please no text-speak or emojis, though I will allow "lol"s, "haha"s, and crying laughing emojis when I say something funny.

Office Hours

During office hours, I will be available to answer any question you may have related to the course. Feel free to come by and ask questions about course content, chat about the economic news of the day, or anything else you may want to discuss. These are your hours, so be sure to take advantage of them.

I have two types of office hours—Walk-in hours in my office (SOBA 122), and virtual office hours. Times for each are listed at the top of the syllabus. You can schedule a virtual appointment using the link on Blackboard. If the listed hours do not fit your schedule or if you need to meet in-person during virtual office hours, please email me and I will be happy to find a time that works for you.

4 Grading

In-Class Discussion – 30%

The last 30–45 minutes of each Thursday class will be dedicated to discussion of the week’s readings and related topics. You are expected to come to class having completed the readings and prepared to discuss them. Your participation in regular discussion will constitute 15% of your final grade.

The remaining 15% will come from three designated Discussion Days, occurring at critical junctures in the course. These days will synthesize material from recent weeks and may include supplemental readings.

Reflection Papers – 10%

You will write three reflection papers, one for each discussion day, responding to a prompt and offering 3 questions to motivate in-class discussion. Each paper should be 2–3 pages long double-spaced, with 12pt Times New Roman font and 1 inch margins. Due dates listed on course schedule below.

Midterm Exam – 20%

There will be one midterm exam, tentatively scheduled for Thursday, March 5.

Final Exam – 30%

The final exam for this course is scheduled for Thursday, May 7 @ 11am. The final will cover material from the entire semester.

Attendance/Participation – 10%

Attendance and participation are important components of this course. Accordingly, you will be expected to attend class regularly. Attendance will be taken at the beginning of each class. If you arrive after attendance has been taken, you must let me know to be counted as present.

If you must miss class for any non-university related reason (illness, doctor’s appointment, vacation travel, etc.), it is your responsibility to notify me in advance. If you do so, your first two absences will be excused. After you have used your two excused absences, or if you don’t give advance notice, each absence will result in a 1 point deduction from your attendance grade. If you will be absent for 3 or more consecutive classes, you must receive an official excused absence from the Dean of Students to be excused.

Extra Credit Presentations

You will have the opportunity to present on a current event related to economics for one extra percentage point added to your final grade. Presentations will take place at the beginning of class and take 3-5 minutes. The sign-up link is available at this link, as well as on Blackboard.

Your presentation must summarize an article covering your topic. The article must not be an opinion piece, and should come from a reputable source. The library provides several high quality news sources, including the New York Times and the Washington Post. I also recommend the Wall Street Journal and The Economist if you have access to them. You may also use other major mainstream sources, such as CNN, ABC, FOX, NBC, etc.

Grade	Percent
A	$\geq 93\%$
A–	90 - 92
B+	87 - 89
B	83 - 86
B–	80 - 82
C+	77 - 79
C	73 - 76
C–	70 - 72
D	60 - 69
F	≤ 59

5 Grading Policies & FAQs

– How is my grade calculated?

Your grade is calculated with the following formula:

$$\text{Grade} = (\text{Discussion} \times 0.3) + (\text{Reflection} \times 0.1) + (\text{Midterm} \times 0.2) + (\text{Final} \times 0.3) + (\text{Attendance} \times 0.1)$$

For example, if you received a 95% on discussion, a 100% for excellent reflections, an 85% on the midterm, a 90% on the final, and a 100% for attendance, you would receive a 92.5% (A) in the course.

Starting the week before the midterm, you will be able to see your current grade in the course on Blackboard. Keep in mind that this is only calculated using grades you have received up to that point, so it may radically change as more graded material is completed.

– Can I submit late work?

Reflection papers are the only submitted assignments in this course, and they are fundamental to motivating our discussion days. Therefore, late reflection papers will not be accepted.

– Can I miss class on discussion or exam days?

It is particularly important that you are in attendance on discussion days. If you know you will miss a discussion day for an excusable reason, you must notify me at least one week in advance. In this scenario the required length for your reflection paper will be extended to 4–5 pages, and it will count toward both your reflection and discussion grades.

Exams cannot be made up. You also cannot be exempted from an exam. If you know you will miss an exam for an excusable reason, you must notify me at least one week in advance so we can arrange an alternative time. If you miss an exam for any reason and do not notify me by the end of the day, you will receive a 0 except in the case of a documented emergency.

– I participate in extracurriculars that will conflict with class. What do I do?

You will be excused from class for documented university-related activities, though you will still be responsible for keeping up with the course. These will not count toward your two excused absences. To avoid any confusion, you must notify me of specific days that you will be absent. Ideally, when you are given your travel schedule, you should email me and point out specific dates of absence. At the very least, you must email me by class time on Tuesday if you will be absent any day that week.

– I think there's been a grading mistake. What should I do?

If you would like to appeal a part of your grade, you must do so via email within 24 hours of receiving the graded material back. If you attempt to discuss a grading issue in person, I will refer you to this policy. Your email should include a detailed explanation of your concern. I will review your request, then respond within 24 hours.

– I worked really hard, but didn't get the grade I wanted. Can you boost my grade?

To be blunt—tough luck. To uphold the integrity of the course and be fair to your fellow classmates, your graded work will be the sole determinant of your course grade. Appeals for grade bumps, whether in-person or via email, will not be entertained. Please do not ask.

Now that I've played bad cop, do remember that you can always increase your final grade by giving an extra credit presentation. That single point, while it may seem small, can be the difference between a B+ and an A- or passing and failing. There will also be bonus points available on each exam, and one additional bonus opportunity. I highly encourage you to take advantage of these opportunities.
